LANCUAGE OF FLOWERS. Truits and flowers of all kinds are used to this day os a means of allogorie communication among a people so illiterate as the Tarks. The rose is princi-pally prized because the Mostoma suppose it grew from the perspiration of Mohomet, and they pp ver suffored the petal of the flow er to wither on the ground. In all employmentical communications it is drouged the representation of beouty and joy; the orang flower masks hope ; the marigold, despair; the amaranth, constant cy ; the tulip, a repreach of infi-delity. It is thus that bouquess of flowers, called sciams, supply the place of letters, and the illit erate lovor conveys to his mis tress feelings and sentiments which the elaborate written language could conrocly express .-In this manner shaves hold ten communications with their mistress, even in the presence of their terrible master. The cap tive Greek is generally omployed as a gardenor: by an ingenions arrongement of a parterro of flowers, he holds mute and eloevon while his jealous rival and master is looking on, and his in-stant death would follow a discovery

THE TIMES.

We begin the record of the events of the past work with a m sorrowful announcement. A great calamity has hefdlen the Con-federater, in the death of its beloved objection, Sroxsward Accessor While the ageny of this bereavenant is fresh in our bearts, it is impossible to do justice to the subject. History alone can do that --He was shot on Saturday night, May 2d, by his own treops, while returning from a reconnoiseance in their front. His left arm was so shattered, that amputation become necessary, and two hones of his right hand were broken by n hall that piezed his paim. His pure manner of living, his excellent constitution, and his hereic fortitude, promised a specity perovery from his wounds, severe as they were hat, owing, it is said, to the indiscret use of cold opplications, he was attacked with Pneumenia, under which he lingured until a que ter past three o'clock, Sunday efferneen, May 10th, when his pure went to the God who made it. During his illness, his thought reported continually to his country, in whose defenses he hered some e again actively employed, and some of his last words, whil bis mind was wandering, were addressed to his Commissary in he half of his troops. It is a convolation to know, that in dying, he felt that he was taken away in the right time, and-to use his when the labors he was sent on eorth to perform, had expression hean finished. If he thus believed, who wall doubt that his ! irreparable as it is, is, novortheless, our gain.

After he was wounded, Gen. J. E. D. STRART took command of his invincible corps, and handled it admirably well throughout the ar-Gen. A. P. Hill now occupies the fallen hero's place, and will full it perhaps as well as any living man could. It is said, that Gen. fill it perhaps as well as any living man could. It is said, that Gen. Jackson himself desired that Gen. Ewell should be his successor, butfor this we cannot rouch. We know that the magnanimums Lee, in his letter of condolence, attributed the important rietory of Sat neday to the skill and energy of him who shall no more lead troups to cular part played by each division and brigndn will be found in chronicle the Lives of this Ninetseath Century. His military life the daily papers. The fruits of the glorious victory are great in pris-overs, not inconsiderable in cannon, and traly immense in small arms, kanparsks, blankets, overcoats, Ao. Dat the glory of the vic tery by no memor convicts the to spoils obtained-it lies in the terri ble thrashing of an army from 130,000 to 150,000 strong, in powe ful position, carefully selected by its commander, and fortified by stworks and ahattis even stronger than those of Gaines' Mull .-It may sound incredible, but the soher truth is, that the threshing a sense ormy was necemplished by scarcely more than a third its number of Southerners. When the impartial historian shall ro ate to future generations the gollant work performed in the first week in May by Lee's voternas, the danger is that he will be set down as a writer of fables. It was exactly what Gen, Leo tarmed -a "glorious victory."

The effect of Hooker's defeat cannot rightly be estimated, for the simple reason that the facts were first suppressed, and then grossly garbled by the despotirm at Washington, and a few meagre details ily reached New York, three days after the battle way over, by a cial messenger who had to take the railroads-the truth not now ing allowed at the North the facilities of unils and telegraphs.the Yankees soon heramo aware that comothing, not nitogether pleasant, had happened to Hocker; for Lincoln's organ first intima-ted that there would be a draft for 500,000 mee, and then amounced fatty, that the entire militis of the United States, hetween the ages of 20 and 45 years, were soon to be called out.

This is Lincoln's concount upon an offsir which his hiroling wri ter assure the people of the North was "no disaster."

But the funniest part is yet to be told. By hook or by crock the truth had romehow leaked out, and there was danger of its going unadultereted to Europe. To counterpet this, the Non York papers of the 11th-the day the stemmer sailed -contained the most sta-pondaus has ever before fabricated even by the Yankees. They tated that Hooker had again crossed the Rappahanneck with eight day's rations; that Stoneman hed again got in Lot's rear, and cut off his communications with Richmond; that Duford's cavalry hed prnotrated to the Virginia and Tennessee railroad and destroyed it nd that the Yankee commander on the Peninsula, toking advantage of these little disturbances, had purched with 10,000 men to Richmond, and taken it without firing a gan.' # The Hllustrious Dead.

Day hofere yesterday, at Lexington, in the very heart of Virvi a, there was committed to the earth the inan the most remarkable men of his time. Mnny beautiful and afting tributes have been rendered to his 1sfty character and his nucesurable services, which are yot but a most inadequate expres-ion of the public grief; and we might well hesitate, when the pers of ready writers have failed to set forth the genius and worth : the hore and the love and sorrow which followed him to the tomb, to write one line upon an event at once so sugust and so appalling as that single douth. But we can write of nothing elso. The wail neusic of the funeral dirge is still counding in our ears; we still see the ghastly plumes nodding above the bigr; and when we a avor to direct our thoughts to subjects such as ordinarily engage as in these columns, the mournful columity, in all its weight of wee tes back upon us, and excludes avery other consideration

It were unwise, perhaps immodest, in us, all unlearned in the If Not mark to attempt a characterization of Thomas Jonarman Jackson are smilltary man. Dut we do not besize to say that be appears to us to belong to that little family of inspired ensequences who, in the m areh of the centuries, have seemed to luro Victory to their standards as her own proper perch, and who have made n difficulties and dangers that stood in their way subservicat to their imperial will and auxiliary to their further progress. They are but a small hand, indeed, there Makers of Dostary and Masters of War, not enough to form a company, far loss n regiment, in flades-Al grandor, Hannibal, Cosar, Fredorick, Napoleon-and others of tee shining note, whose path of conquest we trace across the Dorpho rus and over the Alps, through Russian snows and under Syrian suns, and to where enreer no lapse of time can make the world in different, from whose wonderful achievements no physical change of the earth's surface, no shiftings of empire from East to West, can ever withdraw the attention of mankind. Among these herers Jacanon will take his place when the Plutarch of the future shall was short, as compared with that of any one of them. Two years (for we cannot properly include his service in the war with Manico, distinguished as it was, in the estimate.) comprise all that he did in the eyes of the world. Not were the results of his astonishing labors comparable with these which stiended the long enupaigns of the warriors of bistory. Yat when we place in effective contrast the warrows of nistory. Let which we puter in effective contrast-iclust he did with the means at his command to do it; when we con-sider how ho went on from victory to victory, derpite every draw. back and discouragement, cleaving down the masses of men that opposed him with his irresistible arm, making the little hody of troops which he could acither clothe nor feed more than equal to twice their numbers : when we remember that he fought always in a ordinate position, in which his plans worn liable at any moment to he overvied, and that he never, indeed, had the theatre and the opportunity for the full exhibition of his pressing we are one firmed in the belief that the common verdict of his contempore. ries, which neeigns him the first rank in worfero, will not bereafter

But if JACKSON achieved less than the great Capitalus of ancient or times, (though it may be doubted if the campaign in the Valley of Virginia in the summer of 1862 has over heen surpassed,) surply above them in contemplation of the motive which impelled him to action. He followed no star, he sought no throne, ho asked no earthly gnerdun, was guided by no sellish conwas the principle of his conduct. He recognized a cull to fight for Virginia in her hour of agony, and be obeyed it. He felt within him the mastery of the securion, and he exerted it. Otherwise the him the mastery of the becamon, and he exercise it. Conservations would had not heard of Jackson. But for this diabelical war, the modest Professor would have gone on locating to the class of Natuindext protestor would have gone on tecturing to the close or platu-ral Philosophy at the Millimry Institute, with law eclot than Mr. Faraday across the water; the "Blue Light Elder" might have run his obscure round of serving God in the vilinge where the war found bins, until he was colled to the Congregation of the Saints above.-Such was the simple, carnest moral of his life. What a record it How bright, how elenr, how complete! May we not say, in the language which Clarandon employs in lumenting the doath of Lucius Curoy, Lord Falkland, that "if there were no other brand upon this collous and accursed civil war, than that single loss, it at he most infinitour and excertible to all posterity

After all, perhaps, gratoful for the services which this illustrious an rendered Virginia in her time of screet need, and sorrowing over his fall in utter desolation of heart, we may not he greatest good of Jackson's life in the example be brownthes to those who are to come after us. As the images on the friezes of the Parthe-non follow one another in one continuous succession of noble and mojestic forms, each a hore or a god, so is the long line of the wor. this of the Ancient Commonwealth and Dominion of Virginio per-petuated in the lofty figures that more before mon in this second are of Greatness and Virtue ; and smong them none shall more sertain ear the antique cast of heroism, none shall appear worthier of the hattor, earlier days of the Republic, than the tall, stern stigy of the bifty, correct upy of the layer of the grout and good are the STOXYWALL JACKSON. And if the lives of the grout and good are the most precises heritage that one generation ean hand down to an-other, the oge in which we live, in the story of this one life, shall corsor an incomputable wealth.

The literature of the future will be rich with the inspiration of rear. Poets will sing of hiss, and romaneists will wanve his deeds into the warp and woof of fiction. The beautiful region of the Shenandonh will be closele ground us associated with his memory, and the cottages of the Valley will long proserve traditions of his less familiar traits. "Tell us of JACKSON," shall the children ery eround the firesides, as Bernager says the idle villagers of France call upon the old women for stories of Napoleon-

YULA STARLEY'S GOVERNESS LIFE

BY AUGUSTA WASHINGTON.

I way young when I left the little house, that since my parents' deats, had been the house of Reginald and I. I was young in years, and untutored in the ways of the world, when I became a governess.

when L because a governess. I rentered upon my new duties at the grand mansion of my hirer with trepidation, but the sweet faces and goald manners of my two pupils reasoured me. Sophie, the older, wan a pretzy gith—a plump, darkhaired, dark eyed, lagabier-biving "aga/de," with lovely dimples in her chocks and choin, and with nailles ever creeping about her rulo fils and daooig eyes.
